WHY OUR GRAM BREADHAS REAL VALUE

Probably every housewife knows how Bread is made in a small way, but we are often asked how Bread is made in large quantities, how we can always have it the same, if we don't have bad luck at any time, etc.

Making Bread is our bakers' business. Instead of making a small batch once or twice a week, under varying conditions, we are making it all the time, under scientific principles—even temperature, up-to-date machinery, a large, clean, airy bakery, good workmen and the best of materials.

The cut shows the mixer in which the dough is mixed, and this is the only way to get a perfect mixture and is much more sanitary than the old way of mixing in a box by hand. When the dough is mixed the lever to the left is pulled and the dough dumped into a trough and left to rise. It is then put on a large hardwood table and moulded and put in pans. After baking it is wrapped in wax paper, with real value in every loaf and is always the same.
